The science in both calculating and correcting corneal astigmatism continues to advance and improve. M. Edward Wilson, MD
This lecture and discussion will focus on how to manage the inherent ethical conflicts we encounter daily in an ophthalmology practice. These include new and unproven procedures, conflicts of interest, and teaching. We will discuss what is considered research (experimental) and what is considered innovation. We will explore ways to keep the patient's best interest first, the grey zones in the area of truth-telling, and positive or negative placebo effects.
- 3:15-4:15 p.m. BETTER ONE OR TWO? • Barbara Harris, PA, MBA, COT, OSC
This course discusses basic principles of optics and their application in refinement. Proper use of the Jackson cross cylinder will be demonstrated with emphasis on maintaining spherical equivalent when performing refinement.
